THE RED BICYCLE

PATSY was ready to burst into tears.

"But, mother," she wailed, "All the girls are going out to get some perfectly snazzy outfits that will knock the judges for a loop! I just can't compete in that old blue wool jumper!"

Mrs. Walker's expression didn't alter one bit.

"I'm sorry, darling," said Patsy's mother, "but I can't stretch the budget that far. I won't be able to let you have $25.00 for a new outfit."

"But, gosh, mother," Patsy began — and stopped. Her mother's eyebrows were elevated just one-eighth of an inch, but Patsy knew that look. It meant that further argument was futile, and if Patsy continued on the same subject, she'd be regretting it before long.

Patsy started moodily up the stairs to her own room. Then, like a bolt out of the blue, an idea hit her.

"My bank!" she squealed, and started running up the stairs two at a time. She burst into her room, hastened to the bureau, and picked up a porcelain panda that was standing on her dressing table.

With nervous fingers, Patsy jiggled the bank, shaking the coins out on the table top. Then, when all the coins were out, Patsy took a bobby pin, bent it out straight, and pried into the bank with it.

"Yippee!" shrieked Patsy. "Four dollars in bills, and $19.50 in silver! Twenty-three dollars and fifty cents! I can buy a new outfit for the fashion contest after all!"

Scooping up the money, Patsy deposited it into her purse, and ran down to the kitchen.

"Everything's under control, Mother," Patsy announced gleefully. "I just emptied my panda bank and there's just about enough for me to get myself a real glamor girl outfit!"

Mrs. Walker smiled.

"Would you like me to go along with you on your shopping tour, dear?" she asked.

Patsy leaned across the table and gave her mother a hasty peck on the cheek.

"Don't bother, Mums," she said. "Nancy and I are going together, and between the two of us, we'll be able to pick out an outfit that will knock their eyes out. Neither Nancy or I care which one of us is chosen best-dressed girl in Centerville, so long as that drip, Hedy, doesn't cop the prize! 'Bye now!"

And Patsy dashed out of her house and across the lawn to Nancy's house.

"Yoo hoo, Nancy!" called Patsy. "Better beat feet, honey chile — we've got lots and lots to do today."

A minute later, Nancy joined her friend on the front porch.

"I'm so thrilled, darling," breathed Nancy. "Here's our chance to show that old Hedy up! I'm going to get me a slinky black dress, a pair of long drop earrings, and some spike-heeled shoes to make me look tall. Fashion models are all pretty tall, you know," she confided.

"I don't care," Patsy countered. "I'm going to get a sophisticated dinner dress, full of sequins and stuff, and a velvet hat with a polka-dot veil. That's about all I have money for."

The two girls linked arms and started down the street. A sudden thought occurred to Nancy.

"Say, Patsy," queried Nancy. "Isn't tomorrow your kid brother's birthday?"

Patsy jumped. "Holy cow!" she gasped. "It is Junior's birthday. And I promised to get him that red bike in Jason's department store for a present!"

Nancy snickered. "Well, what are you so jittery about? You can buy it on our way downtown."

"Oh no, I can't," wailed Patsy. "I can't buy him that bicycle and get myself new clothes too. Oh, Nancy — what in the world will I do?"

By this time the girls were almost in front of Jason's. Patsy stopped and looked in the shop window at the red bike. "Jason's Speed Bike, $22.50" read the sign attached to the bicycle.

Patsy groaned.

Nancy was very sympathetic. "I don't think Junior would mind if you didn't get him the bicycle, Patsy. After all, what's more important — getting your brother a birthday present, or buying a gorgeous new dress that will win the prize in the fashion contest? Suppose Hedy gets first prize, then what?"

Patsy was in a dither. Hedy was a menace, and always had been. Even Patsy's boyfriend, Buzz Baxter, had been in danger of succumbing to Hedy's wily charms in the past. And if Hedy were chosen best-dressed girl in town, Patsy might really lose Buzz to Hedy. Men were such fools, Patsy decided.

On the other hand, Patsy adored Junior. Sometimes he was an awful tease, but he was very sweet, and Patsy hated the idea of breaking her promise.

Nancy interrupted Patsy's reverie with a tug on the arm.

"Hurry, sugar," said Nancy. "If we wait too long, the stores will be mobbed and we won't be able to get a thing!"

Patsy sighed. Her mind was made up, but still it wasn't an easy thing to do.

"Tell you what," said Patsy. "You run along, Nancy, and get yourself some nifty clothes. I'm going into Jason's to order that bike. I'm not going to disappoint Junior."

And with that, Patsy walked into Jason's.

Fifteen minutes later, Patsy was back home. Mrs. Walker was quite surprised to see her.

"Back so soon, Patsy?"

"I — I couldn't go shopping, Mother. I remembered that tomorrow is Junior's birthday — so I just went into Jason's and bought him a bicycle."

Mrs. Walker came over and took Patsy in her arms.

"You're a dear girl, Patsy — and I'm proud of you. You won't be sorry, dear — you've done a very unselfish and lovely thing."

That evening, Patsy spent several hours washing and ironing her blue wool jumper and getting her clothes in shape.

"I know I can't win," thought Patsy as she busied herself with her task, "but it's too late to back out of the contest, and besides — I'm no quitter!"

The following evening, Patsy and her family went down to the school auditorium. One by one the girls filed out on the stage, as a jury of fashion experts looked on. Hedy was glamorous in a tight-fitting grey dress, with her glossy black hair piled high on her head. Nancy looked very chic in her slinky black dress. Patsy wore her blue wool jumper with a yellow silk blouse, and a smooth yellow band in her hair.

The judges' expressions were bland as the contestants passed by onstage. Then the winning number was called.

"Number 12!" the judges announced.

Patsy almost swooned.

"Number 12! That's me!"

"Miss Walker's costume is the most suitable for a teenager, and the most becoming," said the judges. "Congratulations on your very good taste."

A short time later, Patsy started home. On her right side was an elated Junior. "You're a swell sister, Patsy," he said. "That bike is a honey."

On her left side was Buzz Baxter, strutting proudly. "Just think," he said, "I've got the best-dressed girl in Centerville!"

Patsy sighed blissfully. Who could ask for anything more?

HARDEN YOURSELF and BECOME "THE MAN" among YOUR FRIENDS

There is no room these days for 'sissies' . . . the man who succeeds is the fellow who is able "to take it and dish it out." Fortify yourself with the most precious thing there is in life . . . a healthy, vibrant, robust, muscular body, and you will be ready and able to become a 'stand-out' anywhere, anyplace, anytime. Take stock of yourself. Look around you . . . look at your friends and associates. Who is the most popular . . . who is the leader, the most striking personality . . . the most alert and in demand among your own crowd? Then ask yourself, why?
